Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The subjects were 20 sedentary middle-aged men (mean age 45.5 ± 5.2 years, mean BMI 25.8 ± 2.1 kg/m²). They were divided into two groups: a control group (n = 10) and an exercise group (n = 10). The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The training program included aerobic exercise (treadmill walking/running) and resistance training (weight lifting). The control group did not participate in any exercise program. Physical fitness was assessed using a series of tests: 10-minute step test, 1-mile walk test, 1-mile run test, and a series of strength tests (1RM bench press, 1RM squat, 1RM deadlift, 1RM bicep curl, 1RM tricep extension, 1RM leg press, 1RM back squat, 1RM front squat, 1RM overhead press, 1RM pull-up, 1RM chin-up, 1RM rowing machine, 1RM sit-up, 1RM plank, 1RM side plank, 1RM core stability test). Health was assessed using a series of tests: blood pressure, heart rate, resting metabolic rate, and body composition (body fat percentage, muscle mass, bone density). The results of the study showed that the exercise group had significantly higher physical fitness and health scores than the control group at the end of the 12-week training program. The exercise group had significantly higher scores on the 10-minute step test, 1-mile walk test, 1-mile run test, and all strength tests. The exercise group also had significantly lower blood pressure, heart rate, resting metabolic rate, and body fat percentage, and significantly higher muscle mass, bone density, and core stability. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve physical fitness and health in sedentary middle-aged men.
