States of Matter: Solid, Liquid, Gas

In the world around us, everything is made up of tiny particles called molecules. These molecules are always present in different ways to create three main states of matter: solid, liquid and gas. Each has some clear-cut characteristics and they change between them.

Solid: Imagine a brick or a box. Solids are made of many, many tiny particles. These tiny particles are packed very closely together. They are held together by strong forces, and they don't move around much.

Liquid: Now think about water. It flows and takes the shape of its container. In liquids, the molecules are not packed as closely together as in solids. They can move around a bit, but they still stay close together.

Gas: Think of the air you breathe. It fills all around you, but you can't touch it. Gases have molecules that are spread out far more than liquids. They fill up the space around them. There are no fixed boundaries for gases, and the molecules are free to move in all directions.

Changing States: Have you ever seen ice melting? Or water boiling? These are changes from one state of matter to another. When a solid melts, it becomes a liquid. When a liquid boils, it becomes a gas. These changes happen because of heat. The change is called melting.

Think about steam. When you boil water, it turns into a gas. This is called boiling. The change from a liquid to a gas is called boiling. It happens because the molecules have enough energy to break away from the liquid and become a gas.

Another change you might see is when a gas turns into a liquid. This is called condensation. For example, when you breathe out, you can see a mist. This is because the water vapor in your breath is condensing into tiny droplets.

So, when a gas turns into a liquid, it's called condensation. When a liquid turns into a gas, it's called boiling. These changes happen because of heat. The change from a gas to a liquid is called condensation.
