States of Matter: Solid, Liquid, Gas

In the world around us, everything is made up of tiny particles called molecules. These molecules are always present in different ways to create three main states of matter: solid, liquid and gas. Each has some different characteristics and they change between them.

Solid: Imagine a brick or a box. Solids are made of many, many tiny molecules. These tiny molecules are packed very closely together. They are arranged in a regular pattern and they don't move around much.

Liquid: Now think about water. It flows and takes the shape of its container. In liquids, the molecules are not packed as closely together as in solids. They can move around a bit, but they still stay close together and don't spread out too far.

Gas: Think of the air you breathe. It fills all around you, but you can't see it. Gases have molecules that are spread out far more than liquids. They fill up the space around them. There are no fixed shapes or positions, and the molecules are always moving around and changing places.

Changing States: Have you ever seen ice melting? Or water boiling? These are changes from one state of matter to another. When ice melts, it changes from a solid to a liquid. When water boils, it changes from a liquid to a gas. These changes happen because of heat. This change is called transformation.

Think about how often you see a solid turning into a liquid. It happens every day! When you see a change from a solid to a gas, it's called sublimation. When you see a change from a liquid to a gas, it's called evaporation. These changes happen because of heat. This change is called transformation.

When you change from a liquid to a solid, it's called freezing. When you change from a gas to a liquid, it's called condensation. These changes happen because of heat. This change is called transformation.

So, when you see a change from one state of matter to another, it's called a transformation. This change happens because of heat. This change is called transformation.
