

SOCIETY AS A SYSTEM OF RELATIONSHIP

Aristotle said that man by nature is social animal. Human beings are animals who live in societies. However, human beings are not the only creatures who live in societies. Ants, termites, birds, monkeys, apes and countless other creatures and animals do the same. But mere life in a group does not mean that these animals have a 'society' among them or the society of human beings is the same as animal society. To differentiate between the animal society and the human society, it is necessary to define society and social relationships that exist in human society.

In the context of Sociology the word 'society' refers to a complex pattern of norms of interaction that arise among a group of people. Whereas in common parlance, the word 'society' is used for designating the members of a specific group and it is generally understood in relation to tangible observations. In Sociology, people are valuable only as agencies of social relationships, which are intangible. Therefore, society is a system of relationships, the pattern of norms of interaction by which the members of the society maintain themselves.

Definition of Society

MacIver and Page defined society as, "It is the web of social relationships." T. Parsons says, "Society may be defined as the total complex of human relationships in so far as they grow out of action in terms of mean-end relationship, intrinsic or symbolic. "Giddings defined society as, "Society is the union itself, the organization, the sum of formal relations in which associating individuals are bound together." Lapiere laid emphasis on the complex pattern of interaction that is seen in the society. He defines, "The term society refers not to group of people, but to the complex pattern of the norms of interaction, that arise among and between them." Prof. Wright emphasized that a collection of people need not be called a
