algorithms and are useful in many applications. We can think of a search tree as a backward-chaining search using depth-first search. That is, starting with the goal, we first try to find a way to achieve the goal. If we fail, we try to find a way to achieve the goal by achieving the goal by achieving the goal. This is the approach taken by depth-first programming, which can achieve many of the same results as forward-chaining. Using logic programming combines the advantages of backward-chaining with the forward-chaining efficiency of forward-chaining. It is also simpler, the search space is smaller, which means that the programmer will not have to deal with large search spaces. It is well suited to get an initial idea of the problem, but the search is a potentially infinite number of steps.

9.4.1 Backward-chaining of finding

Finding can be done in many ways, as discussed in Section 9.4.1. The search space is smaller than the search space, and many general rules can be used to find a solution. The search space is smaller than the search space, and many general rules can be used to find a solution.
