

What does signifying the effectiveness of a treatment in a research?

An example for statistical significance in a study is when a treatment group shows a significant difference in the mean score of a test compared to a control group. This indicates that the treatment has a statistically significant effect on the outcome. However, it is important to note that statistical significance does not necessarily imply that the treatment is effective in a practical sense. It is possible that the treatment has a small effect that is statistically significant but not clinically meaningful. Therefore, it is essential to consider both statistical and clinical significance when evaluating the effectiveness of a treatment.
