Handbook of Response to Intervention Shane R. Jimerson, Matthew K. Burns, Amanda VanDerHeyden, 2007-08-14

Until now practitioners have had access to few detailed descriptions of RTI methods and the effective role they can play in special education. The Handbook of Response to Intervention fills this critical information gap. In this comprehensive volume, more than 90 expert scholars and practitioners provide a guide to the essentials of RTI assessment and identification, as well as research-based interventions for improving students' reading, writing, oral, and math skills. RTI Approach to Evaluating Learning Disabilities Joseph F. Kovalski, Amanda M. VanDerHeyden, Timothy J. Runge, Perry A. Zirkel, Edward S. Shapiro, 2022-11-29. From leading authorities, this indispensable work is now in a revised and expanded second edition, presenting state-of-the-art tools and procedures for practitioners. The book shows how to use response to intervention (RTI) to evaluate K-12 students for specific learning disabilities (SLD). The second edition gives increased attention to optimizing the instructional environment in the context of a multi-tiered system of supports (MTSS). Procedures are described for screening at-risk students using RTI to intensify instruction in reading, writing, and math; identifying SLD; determining eligibility for special education; and planning individualized education programs. Case examples and pointers for practice are woven throughout. In a convenient large-size format, the book includes reproducible tools that can be downloaded and printed for repeated use. New to This Edition: Incorporates contemporary perspectives on SLD; upgraded procedures for implementing an MTSS; new approaches to measuring RTI and enhancements in using classroom observations. Chapter on best practices in academic screening, including important dos and don'ts. Separate chapters on using RTI for reading, written expression, and mathematics. Chapter on RTI and special education law focusing on what practitioners need to know. This book is in The Guilford Practical Intervention in the Schools Series, edited by Sandra M. Chafouleas. SLD Eligibility Perry A. Zirkel, 2006. Students with specific learning disability (SLD) account for approximately half of all students that districts have determined to be eligible for special education under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). Since the late 1970s, the IDEA regulations have required states to use severe discrepancy based on a comparison of the child's academic achievement typically based on a standardized test with the child's intellectual ability typically based on an IQ test as the primary, but not exclusive, criterion for determining SLD. The new regulations issued in August 2006 to implement the 2004 amendments to the IDEA provide significant changes in the determination of SLD eligibility. One of the new provisions concerns responsiveness to intervention (RTI), which is an alternate approach that starts with scientific research-based instruction in general education and offers increasing levels of intervention based on continuous progress monitoring. Pending new state laws and published case law, this overview provides a user-friendly guide to the provisions in the 2004 amendments and the new IDEA regulations pertinent to SLD eligibility, including the role of RTI. Contains 11 notes. Davidoff,2012 The educational community has raised several concerns regarding the identification of students with disabilities Growing numbers of students classified in the Specific Learning Disabilities SLD category have prompted much discussion Available research on SLD classification raises issues regarding the traditional ability achievement discrepancy model of identification as well as disproportional minority membership in special education Operational suggestions for remediation of these problems are lacking With the 2004 reauthorization of IDEA the law now allows the use of Response to Intervention RTI in determinations of SLD eligibility Proponents of RTI claim that it has benefits for decreasing the incidence of special education classification reducing minority overrepresentation in special education and providing early identification and intervention for at risk students If advocates of the RTI design are correct in their assertions research on its structure implementation and benefits are necessary to inform future practice This dissertation study examines the RTI process stakeholder perceptions of RTI benefits and challenges and gains made in reading for students receiving RTI interventions within one public school district This mixed method case study included a qualitative sample of 19 staff members serving on the district RTI team and two building RTI teams Participants included six district administrators three principals three general education teachers two special education teachers two literacy specialists two Child Study Team members and one guidance counselor Qualitative data collection consisted of individual interviews conducted with all participants as well as a focus group for the purpose of member checking Interview and focus group transcripts were coded and key themes were vi generated related to the RTI process staff perceptions of RTI benefits and challenges and RTI impact on SLD classification within the district The quantitative sample consisted of records on thirty first second and third grade students who received RTI interventions Data were analyzed using Single Sample t Tests Independent Samples t Tests a Dependent Samples t Test and the Mann Whitney U Test Quantitative findings indicate that students receiving RTI interventions benefit from the additional support In most cases these students had statistically significant mean beginning scores below same grade peers Their mean gains with RTI interventions were sufficient to produce mean ending scores statistically insignificant in difference from ending benchmarks for their grade As RTI multi tiered intervention models are implemented across the country this study offers additional data regarding quantitative gains made by struggling students as well as staff perceptions of the benefits and challenges of RTI as the process functions in one public school district This data adds to literature in the field and may be assistive to other districts as they draft frameworks for RTI multi tiered intervention systems in the future Report Ohio. Report Ohio. Department of Education,1911 Technical Report Series Ohio State University. Mental Retardation Training Program,1969 Response to Intervention (RTI) in Secondary Schools Pam L. Epler-Brooks,2015 This qualitative collective case study researched how the Response to Intervention RTI service delivery model was used within the secondary educational environment in two Ohio schools Areas researched included the type of professional development used to introduce and sustain RTI the amount of administrative support the use of universal screenings the type of data collected and the instructional strategies used at each tier Three teachers and one school counselor were interviewed using open ended questions classroom observations were conducted and state and student report cards were evaluated for this study The population included a rural school with approximately 750 students in Grades 7 12 and a suburban school with 1 450 students in Grades 9 12 Both schools scored excellent on their state report card for the 2009 2010 school year and each school used a four tiered model of RTI The findings concluded that at both schools Tier I interventions were conducted within the regular classroom by the general education teacher and Tier IV interventions were used for special education services For Tier II in one school the general education teachers attempted different interventions while at the other school content area teachers provided tutoring through a special study hall For Tier III at one school the students were sent to a reading specialist while at the other school students received tutoring assistance in the content areas and with study skills For the two schools researched the RtI service delivery model was successful This research implies that RTI can be used within the secondary educational learning environment but that each school is going to have to look at its resources and devise a plan that best fits the school or school district This research also implies that more studies need to be done on this topic to determine whether RTI can make a difference in closing the achievement gap
