In 1980, the Supreme Court held that a town ordinance that regulated door-to-door or on-street solicitation of contributions was unconstitutionally overbroad. Village of Schaumburg v. Citizens for A Better Environment, 444 U.S. 620 (1980). The ordinance allowed solicitations only if the soliciting organization could show, in applying for a permit, that 75% of its receipts would be used directly for charitable purposes. Salaries or commissions for solicitors and administrative costs and overhead could not be considered as used directly for charitable purposes under the ordinance.

The Court, in an 8-1 decision, concluded that, although soliciting financial support is subject to reasonable regulation, the Schaumburg ordinance was drafted more broadly than reasonably necessary to regulate solicitation. As a result, the ordinance interfered with First and Fourteenth Amendment guarantees of the right of free speech and assembly.

Although it may not be apparent at first how solicitation of funds can be equated with the exercise of free speech, the Court was concerned that the ordinance in Schaumburg would prevent fundraising organizations that necessarily had high administrative costs from disseminating information from door-to-door or on the street. The organization in Schaumburg used a substantial part of its receipts for the salaries of its door-to-door solicitors, who distributed information on environmental issues as they asked for contributions. Without a salaried staff of solicitors, the organization would have been less able to obtain the help needed to make its information available to the public. The strict 75% requirement discouraged fundraising and public contacts by organizations that relied primarily

Welfare for Politicians? John Samples, 2005-03-25 Candidates and parties need money to fight election campaigns In the United States this money comes largely from individuals and groups not the government and taxpayers Many people criticize such private financing of politics Private donations they claim advance special interests thereby corrupting politics and government Some critics argue that government should ban private campaign contributions in favor of financing by taxpayers Since public money comes from everyone they reason it actually comes from no one which cuts out corruption before it begins But taxpayer financing of campaigns such as the income tax check off for presidential campaigns has its share of critics who point out that public financing has often come up short in terms of increasing electoral competition Another major problem concerns the taxpayers who are called on to fund these programs Taxpayer financing in polls and in reality lacks public support The public resists giving welfare to politicians to run their campaigns In Welfare for Politicians leading analysts from both sides of the public financing debate address the history of these programs including the successes and failures of the financing system for presidential elections They also take up recent innovations in the states including models of full taxpayer financing passed by initiative in Arizona Maine and Massachusetts Together they offer a groundbreaking analysis of the problem and an instructive guide to future reform

New Media, Campaigning and the 2008 Facebook Election Thomas J. Johnson, David D. Perlmutter, 2013-12-16 Some political observers dubbed the 2008 presidential campaign as the Facebook Election Barack Obama in particular employed social media such as blogs Twitter Flickr Digg YouTube MySpace and Facebook to run a grassroots style campaign The Obama campaign was keenly aware that voters particularly the young are not simply consumers of information but conduits of information as well They often replaced the professional filter of traditional media with a social one Social media allowed candidates to do electronically what previously had to be done through shoe leather and phone banks contact volunteers and donors and schedule and promote events The 2008 Election marked a new era where the candidates no longer had complete control over their campaign message The individual viewer in a campaign crowd with a cell phone can record a candidate's gaffe post it on YouTube or Flickr and within days millions will be gasping or guffawing The traditional campaign with its centralized power and planning although not dead now coexists with an unstructured digital democracy New Media Campaigning and the 2008 Facebook Election examines the way social media changed how candidates campaigned how the media covered the election and how voters received information

The Fallacy of Campaign Finance Reform John

Samples, 2008-09-15 At first glance campaign finance reform looks like a good idea McCain Feingold for instance regulates campaigns by prohibiting national political parties from accepting soft money contributions from corporations labor unions and wealthy individuals But are such measures or any of the numerous and similarly restrictive proposals that have circulated through Washington in recent years really good for our democracy John Samples says no and here he takes a penetrating look into the premises and consequences of the long crusade against big money in politics How many Americans he asks know that there is little to no evidence that campaign contributions really influence members of Congress Or that so called negative political advertising actually improves the democratic process by increasing voter turnout and knowledge Or that limits on campaign contributions make it harder to run for office thereby protecting incumbent representatives from losing their seats of power Posing tough questions such as these Samples uncovers numerous fallacies beneath proposals for campaign finance reform He argues that our most common concerns about money in politics are misplaced because the ideals implicit in our notion of corruption are incoherent or indefensible The chance to regulate money in politics allows representatives to serve their own interests at a cost to their constituents And ironically this long crusade against the corruption caused by campaign contributions allows public officials to reduce their vulnerability by suppressing electoral competition Defying long held assumptions and conventional political wisdom The Fallacy of Campaign Finance Reform is a provocative and decidedly nonpartisan work that will be essential for anyone concerned about the future of American government
