era of data explosion in which large amounts of data are readily available and accessible in the clinical environment. The fast growing biomedical and healthcare data provide unprecedented opportunities for data driven scientific knowledge discovery and clinical decision support. However, it is widely acknowledged that biomedical and healthcare data contain high dimensions, large volumes, missing values, imbalanced classes, heterogeneous sources, multi modalities, and measurement noises. These inherent features pose significant barriers to the translation of data into meaningful clinical actions. Thus, there arises an urgent and compelling need for the development of innovative machine learning simulation and optimization algorithms to cope with the unique challenges associated with biomedical and healthcare data, facilitating the transformation of data into actionable insights for smart health. Our Research Topic aims at catalyzing synergies among biomedical informatics, machine learning, computer simulation, operations research, systems engineering, and other related fields with three specific goals: 1. develop cutting edge data driven models to accelerate scientific knowledge discovery in biomedicine from medical and healthcare data collected from laboratory systems, imaging systems, and medical and sensing devices; 2. develop advanced simulation and calibration algorithms to build personalized digital twins by effectively assimilating patient specific medical data with population level computer models, facilitating precision medical planning; 3. develop innovative optimization algorithms for optimal medical decision making in the face of uncertainty, factors, conflicting objectives, and complex trade offs. This Research Topic will offer a timely collection of information to benefit the researchers and practitioners working in the broad fields of biomedical informatics, healthcare data analytics, medical image processing, and health related artificial intelligence. By harnessing the potential of machine learning, computational simulation, and mathematical optimization techniques, healthcare professionals can effectively analyze and interpret the vast amount of biomedical data available to them, which will ultimately lead to more accurate disease diagnosis, personalized treatment plans, and improved patient outcomes.

Cook, 2021 Depression affects about 13% of pregnant women and about 10% of women after childbirth Some cases are so severe the mother may even commit suicide If left untreated postpartum depression PPD affects both the mother's and the infant's health as well as their quality of life The gap in clinical practice is that currently patients only complete a postpartum depression screening tool during their 6 week follow up appointment with their OB GYN leaving a gap in PPD detection and care during the immediate postpartum period

Postpartum nurses are not usually given specialized training in postpartum depression. The purpose of this study was to educate postpartum nurses on postpartum depression indications and symptoms as well as the use of a validated screening instrument. The study was limited to email delivery of a PowerPoint presentation due to the limits imposed by the COVID 19 pandemic. The study used a pretest posttest design to determine if the education program increased knowledge of the nurses on PPD. The target sample was 30 postpartum registered nurses; however, only 19 postpartum nurses participated in the demographic survey. 12 postpartum nurses took the pretest and 7 completed the posttest. While results showed no statistical significance due to small sample size, a slight increase in knowledge did occur based on posttest scores. Recommendations include expanding the methods of delivering education to include in person group education with more focus not only on knowledge gain but nursing self efficacy and actual change in practice. This would add more validity to the efficacy of nurse education.
