Figure 1 illustrates a two-stage experimental design. In Stage 1, participants are divided into a Control group and a Treatment group. Both groups undergo a Pre-Test and a Post-Test. The Control group's results are compared to the Treatment group's results. In Stage 2, the Control group is again compared to the Treatment group, with the Control group's results being compared to the Treatment group's results. The diagram shows the flow of participants through these stages and the comparison between the two groups.

Keywords: To introduce the concept of field dependence, students can use cardboard construction paper. They should be divided into 4 groups of 4 students. Assign the groups to make a 3-dimensional cube. The groups should be given 12 minutes to complete the task. The teacher should observe the groups and provide feedback as needed.

Abstract. This subchapter is devoted to the study of the structure of the group of automorphisms of a free group. It is shown that the group of automorphisms of a free group is a free group of countable rank. The structure of the group of automorphisms of a free group is studied in detail. It is shown that the group of automorphisms of a free group is a free group of countable rank. The structure of the group of automorphisms of a free group is studied in detail. It is shown that the group of automorphisms of a free group is a free group of countable rank.

There are a number of reasons why the results of this study may not be generalizable to other populations. First, the sample was drawn from a single university, and the results may be specific to that population. Second, the study was conducted in a single country, and the results may not be generalizable to other cultures. Third, the study was conducted in a single time period, and the results may not be generalizable to other time periods. Finally, the study was conducted in a single setting, and the results may not be generalizable to other settings.
