- In order to prevent electric shock or instrument failure, do not turn on the power supply until all of the setup components are in place.
- If failure or error of this instrument could result in a critical accident of the system, install an external protection circuit to prevent such an accident.
- In order to prevent electric shock or instrument failure, protect power line and the input/output lines from high currents by using fuses with

Abstract

- (12) For the measurement, use the specified connections wires.
- (13) For RTG input, use leads with low resistance and having no resistance differences among the 3 leads.
- (14) Control input signal wiring must be independent power, electric equipment power and heat power.
- (15) Control instrument power wiring is not to be influenced by noise from the electric equipment power. If the instrument may be affected by external noise, a noise filter circuit is used.
- Choose the distance between input power supply relay position. The closer the distance between the relay and the main electric for noise reduction.
- Install the noise filter on the power which is already grounded and distribute the wiring distance between the noise filter, relay and the instrument power terminals.
- Do not install fuse and switch on the filter output signal since this may lessen the effect.
- (16) For power supply wire, use shielded wire with low voltage drop.
- (17) Use 12 or 24 V and, measuring the power, use the power input after power on. Use a noise relay when the output line is used for an external control circuit.
- (18) The relay should be a no power supply switch not fuse. Therefore, install the fuse close to the instrument.
- Recommended fuse rating: Rated voltage: 250 V, Rated current: 1 A, • Fuse type: Time-lag type
- (19) To use instrument with power supply of 24 V, please be sure to supply the power from 24V circuit.
- (20) This instrument is designed to be used under the following environmental conditions: (IEC 60730)
