Ecological Pyramids Guided Inquiry

MODEL 1: ORGANISM IN A FOREST ECOSYSTEM

1. In each box, label the organism in the order of importance in the ecosystem by drawing "X" on each box. In a forest ecosystem, the fox is the most important organism, followed by the snake, then the bird, and finally the tree. This is because the fox is the top predator, and the tree is the base of the food chain.

Background: An ecological pyramid is a diagram that shows the flow of energy and matter through an ecosystem. The pyramid is divided into levels, with the base representing the producers (plants) and the top representing the top predators (tertiary consumers). The width of each level represents the relative amount of energy and matter at that level. The pyramid shows that energy and matter are lost at each level, and that the amount of energy and matter decreases as it moves up the pyramid.

2. Based on the flow of energy and matter, which organism in the ecosystem is the most important? Why?

3. Using the flow of energy and matter, which organism in the ecosystem is the least important? Why?

4. Using the flow of energy and matter, which organism in the ecosystem is the most important? Why?
