Relationships and Biodiversity

A Laboratory Activity for the Living Environment

1. Read the background information and read the instructions.

<http://www.johns-hopkins.edu/edp/030401.html>

Background

Students receive a collection of seed samples of plants from a community used for testing experimental effects of environmental factors on the community. Students learn (analyzing data, and comparing and contrasting species and traits) why the species found at each position of study.

Students determine which species of plants are most likely to produce the strongest response to the environmental factors that are studied (e.g.,  $\text{H}_2\text{O}$  and  $\text{CO}_2$ ) and to which to respond to the environment. They will learn to:

- a) select species and related features to describe and compare species of plants using scientific language (morphology, structure, function)
  - b) select and describe the characteristics of species that are most likely to respond to the environment
2. The student will be able to: Relationships between species and the environment (e.g., the relationship between the environment and the species of plants and the environment of the species of plants).

Task 1: The student will be able to: Relationships of Plants

- a) determine the relationship between the plant and the environment (e.g., the relationship between the plant and the environment of the plant and the environment of the plant)
- b) determine the relationship between the plant and the environment (e.g., the relationship between the plant and the environment of the plant and the environment of the plant)
- c) determine the relationship between the plant and the environment (e.g., the relationship between the plant and the environment of the plant and the environment of the plant)
