Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 sedentary women who were randomly assigned to a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes, and included a combination of aerobic and resistance training. The control group remained sedentary throughout the study. HR and EE were measured at rest and during a 30-minute submaximal exercise test at baseline and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the training program significantly increased HR and EE in the trained group compared to the control group. The increase in HR was approximately 10 beats per minute, and the increase in EE was approximately 100 kcal per day. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively improve cardiovascular fitness and energy expenditure in sedentary, middle-aged women.
