

Report Models

A report model is a user-friendly description of an underlying database, with pre-established data relationships and auto-generated queries.

Report models can be used as data sources for reports created Report Builder 3.0.

A report model is an additional layer of information that maps database tables and views into concepts that are meaningful to business users. A well-designed report model should reflect the information that business users want to report on organized in a meaningful way.

Administrators create report models and then publish them to a report server (Report Central). Report models can be managed just like other shared data sources.

The purpose of a report model is to remove the need for specialized knowledge of the underlying database schema and query language. Report models manage building queries, data source connections and authentication, expressions, filters, and parameters for the user, allowing business users to focus on report design.
