During the last years of his life, Wagner was suffering from a bad case of depression. Indeed, his Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (1868) – influenced through a series of dramatic setbacks in 1866 that changed one of the great artists of the 19th century into a recluse – is a work that is almost entirely about the struggle to create art. These events have been described by the musical scholar David E. Hughes thus: Wagner, after producing only a few minor works, began to experience a crisis of confidence. Following his marriage to Minna in 1836, he turned to a life of domesticity and the ordinary life, growing his hair long. Wagner felt that he had lost his creative powers and that he was no longer a composer. Struggling against his depression, he wrote his last opera, Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg, in 1868. He believed that his last, greatest creation, about the musician, might overcome him. The work was written slowly and painstakingly, and Wagner felt that it was his last masterpiece. He died in 1883, having completed the opera, with the Meistersinger. The musical was premiered in 1868, and was well received. It is a work of great importance, and is often considered to be the most important work of Wagner's career. While the 1000-hour rule is not strictly enforced, it is a useful benchmark for employers and regulators.
