

and the government. According to one of the agencies that worked closely with the government, this turnaround was without precedent.

3. The Amur falcon is an insect eating raptor with an epic migratory route. It breeds in South-east Siberia and north China in the summer, before flying back to south and east Africa, ahead of winter. On its way back , the Amur falcon halts at the Doyang reservoir.

4. Conservationists say that the October- November halt on the birds at Doyang is the biggest congregation of Amur falcons in the world. Though the reservoir has been existence only since 2001, these birds have been traditionally coming to this area even prior to the construction of the dam. The sky would turn black when huge flocks of the falcons arrived, the villagers informed Bano Haralu, a member of one of the NGO teams that worked there. Her team was one that publicised the mass killings of the falcons.

5. Around 12000 – 14000 birds were hunted daily to be consumed by the locals and sold as meat. The birds' wings were broken and they were kept alive in mosquito nets or cane baskets before being strung on rods and carried to markets. Many of the birds had their feathers plucked out and the flesh smoked for longer life. Each falcon fetched the hunter Rs 16-25 and each hunter made Rs 20000-40000 last season. Most of these hunters were drawn from among the local fisherman community, who had turned to hunting down the birds after diminishing returns from fishing.

6. The massacre shocked conservation circles. The government and NGOs together with help of the BHNS (Bombay Natural History Society) one of the agencies that worked with the locals to stop the killings, and a leading bird conservation group of the country, set down to work. They set up eco clubs among local children where awareness was raised about the falcon and its amazing migratory habits. Haralu says the elders got sensitized through their kids. The church came forward in spreading the word. The government stepped up vigilance and the Chief Minister himself visited the village and appealed to the villagers not to hunt the birds. This was the first time that a Chief Minister of a state had asked people not to hunt among a community when hunting was a way of life.

While the menace has been stemmed for the present, activists say that the campaign needs to be sustained. Livelihood issues need to be addressed if people have to be restrained from hunting. Whatever be the outcome in the long run, for the present the experiment has been hailed as the biggest success story in conservation and is recorded to be a miracle in Nagaland.
