There had been problems, notably the difficulties faced by the African continent, but even a tiny part from the beginning to the end of the century of the 20th century. Economic globalization was not a process of self-enforcement that forced the poorest of the world to improve themselves, as suggested by the dominant view. The only way to ensure that the benefits of globalization were shared was to ensure that the benefits were shared. The only way to ensure that the benefits of globalization were shared was to ensure that the benefits were shared. The only way to ensure that the benefits of globalization were shared was to ensure that the benefits were shared.
