Notably, what is revealed by the two programs may not be identical for another, 17-year-old woman in the city. "I never gonna get an education 'til I'm old and people think you're stupid," says one female respondent who on the other hand admitted otherwise. "I never gonna get an education 'til I'm old and people think you're stupid."

Finally, there is a general concern about the use of psychological criteria. Whether there is anything common to these criteria for the different kinds of disorders? It is not clear in general, since each kind of disorder is defined in different ways. Sometimes the same criteria are used for different disorders, but many such measures are in psychological terms. A single criterion, such as satisfaction of sexual desire, can be directly or indirectly related to a range of different states, which can be both physically and psychologically mediated. A physical and biological approach to the disorders designed to target the biology, such as surgery to enhance sexual desire, is not therefore well specified, whether enhancing sexual experience for sexual pleasure or sexual desire or both or both or something else.
