THEORY

Light can be considered as a beam, or ray, that travels in straight lines if the size of wavelength (propagation) is less than the wavelength of light. Light rays travelling in the same direction (parallel to each other) are called parallel rays. If it is not parallel light rays the wavefronts (perpendicular to the rays) are curved. If the light rays are parallel, part of the light will pass through the lens, and the other part will be reflected. This process is called as reflection, and the light rays are called as reflected rays.

Law of Reflection: As seen in Figure 1, showing that when a light ray strikes a surface, the angle of incidence, θ_i , is equal to the angle of reflection, θ_r . Both angles are measured from the normal, the perpendicular to the surface. This is true for flat as well as curved surfaces. Curved surfaces which bulge outward are called convex, while those that bulge inward are called concave. If the surface is spherical, or circular, then the reflecting ray may either converge to a point (focus, or focus point) or diverge from a point (focus point).

As in Figure 1, the red line shows light rays that are parallel to the surface.
