algorithms and are useful in many applications. We can think of a search tree as a backward-chaining search using depth-first search. That is, starting with the goal, we first go down the leftmost branch, then up, then down the next branch, and so on, until we reach the root. This is the approach used by depth-first programming systems, which can achieve strong and robust performance in problem domains. Using logic programming combines the good characteristics of backward-chaining with the forward-programming efficiency of forward-chaining. It is also simpler, the branching factor being small, which means that the programmer need not write too many rules. It is well suited to get an initial idea, and produces the bottom-up view, that is, a generally preferred direction of design.

9.4.2 Database-oriented AI Programming

Logic can be used to represent a database as discussed in Section 9.3.4. The unique feature is that logic can be used to represent a database and query it. A database is a collection of data, and the query is a request for data. The query is a request for data that is stored in the database.
