

Relationships and Biodiversity

A laboratory activity for the Living Environment

Introduction

Potato curus is a valuable plant because it produces Curol, a compound used for treating certain kinds of cancer. Curol cannot be produced in the laboratory. Potato curus grows very slowly and is on the endangered species list, so its ability to provide Curol in large quantities is limited.

Species that are more closely related to Potato curus are more likely to produce the important substance Curol because their DNA is similar. If you remember, DNA codes the directions for making proteins and curol is a protein. Three similar plant species that are plentiful (X, Y, and Z) may be related to Potato curus. You will work as a researcher to:

- gather structural and molecular evidence to determine which plant species is most closely related to the hypothetical species (think it is not real) Potato curus
- use this evidence to decide which plant species is most likely to serve as a source of important substance Curol

How are we going to figure out which plant is most closely related?

We will use some different tests to complete the task.

- Three different forms of structural evidence.
- An enzyme catalyzed reaction test.
- DNA gel electrophoresis.
- Paper chromatography.
- Molecular evidence.

Living within a Fair Share Ecological Footprint Robert Vale, Brenda Vale, 2013-09-02 According to many authorities the impact of humanity on the earth is already overshooting the earth's capacity to supply humanity's needs This is an unsustainable position This book does not focus on the problem but on the solution by showing what it is like to live within a fair earth share ecological footprint The authors describe numerical methods used to calculate this concentrating on low or no cost behaviour change rather than on potentially expensive technological innovation They show what people need to do now in regions where their current lifestyle means they are living beyond their ecological means such as in Europe North America and Australasia The calculations focus on outcomes rather than on detailed discussion of the methods used The main objective is to show that living with a reduced ecological footprint is both possible and not so very different from the way most people currently live in the west The book clearly demonstrates that change in behaviour now will avoid some very challenging problems in the future The emphasis is on workable practical and sustainable solutions based on quantified research rather than on generalities about overall problems facing humanity
