between the great potential benefit that usable mobile IT could yield in the domain of emergency response and the specific design challenges for such technologies in this particularly unforgiving domain was the foundation of our decision to create a venue for researchers and practitioners from different disciplines. During this year's workshop the latest approaches and technical solutions in the area of mobile information technology for emergency response planning and execution were presented and demonstrated. We invited participation from research industry and public rescue organizations to enable an in-depth discussion of the opportunities and drawbacks of new digital technologies for emergency response. The call for papers for the second Mobile Response workshop attracted over 25 submissions from 11 different countries including international submissions from the USA, Brazil, and Japan. An international Program Committee with expertsonmobileinformation technology emergency response and emergency response equipment selected 12 submissions for presentation during the workshop. The program was completed by two outstanding keynote presentations and one invited presentation on prevailing topics of high interest to the scientific and practitioner communities.
