

Blackburne, 1997, p. 123: "Black and Shapere's (1996) Thesis: Biology's limits determine human life conditions and even experiences, and even values."

But, as Rieppel has concluded after reading Blackburn's discussion of genetics and modeling bugs, this thesis is somewhat more than just an overstatement of what Galton's theory of human variation has covered since Galton's time, and would not be a noteworthy discovery. It is just a restatement of what we already know: all organisms have, and all things that are made of them have, a certain organization, and all things that are made of them are organized. — Blackburn's theory is a bit peculiar.

For instance, whether organisms have such things as a "soul" — a complex, self-organizing system — depends on their particular structure and their organization, but this is just a restatement of what Blackburn's theory is about. — Blackburn's theory is a bit peculiar. — Blackburn's theory is a bit peculiar.
