Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) and an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic and resistance exercise. The CON group did not exercise. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness and increase energy expenditure in sedentary, middle-aged women.

Careless, bullying, snubbing, or shunning are how Thuringians describe the behavior of just 10 percent of their neighbors, according to the poll. Twenty-one percent of the respondents say that their neighbors are "too close" to them, and 16 percent say that their neighbors are "too far" from them. The poll also found that 10 percent of the respondents say that their neighbors are "too noisy" and 10 percent say that their neighbors are "too quiet."

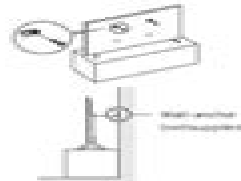

Abstract: The authors present an experimental approach to quantify the complexity of the human brain network. They demonstrate that the complexity of the network is related to the degree of the nodes, the number of connections, and the number of clusters. The authors also show that the complexity of the network is related to the degree of the nodes, the number of connections, and the number of clusters. The authors also show that the complexity of the network is related to the degree of the nodes, the number of connections, and the number of clusters.
