Intelligence activities (IA) depend on the flow of information and increasingly the speed of it. It is the results from the rapid dissemination of the information that bring the greatest advantage to the product-produce distribution cycle. Success or failure in any one phase of the product cycle may require less processing, supporting, and delivery of the information. Information is a critical success factor. It enables the stream to move rapidly to the market. The ability to produce and disseminate information quickly is critical to the success of many critical operations of the war and peace economies.
