Klaus Müller was working as Vice President (Marketing) at Schneider Elektrik AG, a reputed multinational company. However, the company was currently going through difficult times as sales had continuously shown a downward trend over the last two quarters.

Klaus's division, which had previously been a major revenue contributor to the company's financial health, was now desperately trying to secure a significant government contract. Despite their best efforts, they had not succeeded in achieving any positive breakthroughs.

Schneider Elektrik AG was a professional company, and Klaus's local superiors were under pressure from their headquarters in Berlin to deliver positive results. In the last performance review meeting conducted by the Executive Director (Germany Head), Klaus was reprimanded for his poor performance.

He assured them that his division was working on a special contract from the Bundesministerium der Verteidigung (Ministry of Defense) for a secret installation near Stuttgart, and that a tender would be submitted shortly.

Klaus was under extreme pressure and deeply perturbed. The situation was aggravated further by a warning from the top management that if the deal was not secured in favor of the company, his division might have to be closed, and he might lose his lucrative job.

There was another aspect causing him deep mental anguish: his precarious personal financial situation. Klaus was the sole breadwinner for his family, with two school- and university-going children and an elderly, ailing mother. The heavy expenditure on education and medical care was putting a significant strain on his monthly salary. Regular EMI payments for a housing loan taken from a bank were unavoidable, and any default could result in severe legal consequences.

Against this backdrop, Klaus was hoping for a miracle.

Suddenly, there was a turn of events. His secretary informed him that a gentleman named Wolfgang Meier wanted to see him, as he was interested in the position of Manager that Klaus needed to fill in the company. The secretary also brought to Klaus's attention that Wolfgang's CV had been received through the office of the Minister of Defense.

During the interview with Wolfgang Meier, Klaus found him to be technically sound, resourceful, and an experienced marketer. Wolfgang seemed to be well-versed in tendering procedures and had a knack for follow-up and liaising in this regard. Klaus
