

Verbal Analysis Test Question Preview

Work related relocation is not a matter of price. The decision whether to relocate involves a complex set of variables, mostly of a financial nature. Pay is one of the most important ones. Undoubtedly, the new salary should allow maintenance of the lifestyle the candidate is used to in their current location. It is also advisable to compare the cost of living and real estate prices in the candidate's current city with those of the new one. Beyond housing costs, one should include the price of groceries, restaurant meals and petrol.

When considering a work- related relocation, the growth of the candidate's career should be thoughtfully considered. If the new position offers a noteworthy professional promotion, it can be the right long-term move, counterweighing a possible pay cut or higher cost of living.

1. According to the first paragraph, in which case should a candidate clearly refuse work- related relocation? [explanation]

- ☐ A When the cost of living is higher than the candidate's current city. [x]
- ☐ B When the price of groceries and gasoline is higher than the candidate's current city. [x]
- ☐ C When the candidate is not able to maintain his previous lifestyle. [x]
- ☐ D When the job offer doesn't involve career growth. [x]
