

BIOOL 1001 – Physiology Laboratory

Laboratory Activity 10

Plant Pigment Extraction and Analysis

Vegetables, fruits, and flowers contain chemicals called pigments that give them their characteristic colors. These pigments are responsible for the colors of many plants and animals. In this laboratory activity, you will extract pigments from vegetables and fruits and analyze them using a technique called chromatography. This technique separates the different pigments based on their solubility and polarity, allowing you to identify the specific pigments present in a sample.

Objectives of Laboratory Activity

By the end of this laboratory activity, you should be able to:

1. Extract pigments from vegetables and fruits.

2. Analyze the extracted pigments.

1. Prepare the vegetable and fruit samples for pigment extraction. Wash the vegetables thoroughly (e.g., spinach, carrots, beets) and chop them into small pieces. Remove any excess water.

2. Extract the pigments from the vegetable and fruit samples using a suitable solvent (e.g., acetone, ethanol, or methanol).
