worst In all things there is somewhat that is good and especially in a book which commonly is made with study Some are of so awkward a mind that amongst a thousand perfections they'll hit upon the only fault that is to be found and speak of nothing else as if they were only cut out for common sewers of the filth of the will and wit of others and for keeping a Register of all the faults which they see That is rather the punishment of their bad discerning than the exercise of their subtlety They spend their life ill because they only feed on naughty things Happier are they who amongst a thousand faults at first discover a perfection that happened to be there by chance MAXIME CXLI Not to listen to one's self It's worth little to be satisfied with one's self if one content not others Commonly self-esteem is punished by universal contempt He that pays himself remains a debtor to all others It is misbecoming for one to speak that he may hear himself If it be folly to speak to one's self it is doubly so to listen to himself before others It is a fault in great men to speak with an imperious tone and that which stuns those who hear them at every word they say their ears importunately beg applause or flattery The presumptuous speak also by echo and since the conversation moves upon the stilts of Pride every word comes guarded with this impertinent exclamation Rarely well said Ah that's a sweet saying MAXIME CXLII Never to espouse a bad party in spite to an Adversary
