

Weather - An Introduction to Weather

by Heather

What does the word "weather" mean to you? Each person living here is describing the weather. There are beautiful sunny days with blue skies, and then there are gray, rainy days perfect for staying in bed. But do you know what actually makes weather? The science behind the weather is tricky. Every year, we learn about several different types of weather.

Let's describe a specific condition of weather. Weather is the condition that atmosphere all of planet Earth experiences. First, we'll learn about the weather temperature, humidity, wind speed and direction, and air pressure.

Temperature is the measure of how hot or cold the air is. When the sun comes down on Earth, it gives us a warm blanket. But that is not all that happens. The sun's rays all the way down to the water on Earth. This process is responsible for many changes in weather, and sometimes, it's the opposite. Sometimes, the sun's rays are not enough.

Humidity is the amount of water in the air. The air always has water in it, even though we never notice it. A lot of the weather conditions that we experience come from humidity. Clouds, rain, and snow are all part of the water cycle.

Wind is the movement of air from one place to another. The air always has a direction, but it's not always the same. Sometimes, the wind can be strong and sometimes it can be weak. The wind is also responsible for many changes in weather, and sometimes, it's the opposite. Sometimes, the wind is not enough.

Air pressure is the force that pushes the air down. It's the force that keeps the air from going up. The air pressure is always there, but it's not always the same. The air pressure is also responsible for many changes in weather, and sometimes, it's the opposite. Sometimes, the air pressure is not enough.
