

Blackburne, 1997, p. 123: "Black and Shapere's (1996) book is a very welcome contribution to the philosophy of science, and it is a pleasure to see it published in paperback."

But, as Black has so effectively demonstrated, Black's discussion of science is off-putting. For, if Black is correct, it is impossible to have a theory that is not subject to falsification. Other explanations for Black's views are more plausible, and would not require the kind of revision. It is just that it is not really "natural" to have a theory that is not subject to falsification. Black's discussion is a bit surprising – at least, it is not what one would expect.

For instance, Black's argument about the "natural" of science is a bit surprising. It is not clear what Black's argument is about.

Black's is a very interesting and important contribution to the philosophy of science. It is a very good book, and it is a pleasure to see it published. – at least, it is not what one would expect. Black's argument is a bit surprising. It is not clear what Black's argument is about.
