

Study Guide: Physical and Chemical Oceanography

Effective composition of seawater controlled by:

- 1) Evaporation/precipitation - gives control by removing salt content from surface during evaporation, and adding salt content back into surface during precipitation
- 2) Runoff - water moving through salt to lower salt concentrations during rain, and no moving saltwater, leaving behind saltwater and all dissolved substances
- 3) Geological processes - dissolved chemical compounds, including sodium, calcium, magnesium, and potassium, are added to the ocean water by rivers, and by the ocean floor.

Effective evaporation and precipitation on salinity:

- 1) Evaporation - water evaporates, leaving salt
- 2) Precipitation - water precipitates, leaving salt

How temperature and salinity produce density, water volume, and pressure:

Temperature differences cause water density:

- 1) Warm water is less dense than cold water
- 2) Warm water is less dense than cold water, and cold water is more dense
- 3) When the temperature difference is large, the density difference is also large, and the water is more dense.

Salinity differences cause water density:

- 1) Water with higher salinity is more dense than water with lower salinity
- 2) Water with higher salinity, and lower temperature, is the most dense water in the ocean
- 3) The density difference is also large when the temperature difference is large, and the salinity difference is large

Runoff:

Runoff is the water that runs off the land and into the ocean, and it is the most important factor in the ocean's salinity.

Geological effects:

On the land, runoff is the water that runs off the land and into the ocean.

Evaporation/precipitation: is the difference in water between the surface and the atmosphere.

Runoff that affects the ocean: - water that runs off the land and into the ocean.

Runoff that affects the ocean is the water that runs off the land and into the ocean, and it is the most important factor in the ocean's salinity.
